Driving License

Penguin doesn't have a driver's license.

When she lived in Korea,
the Korean public transportation was very useful so she never felt
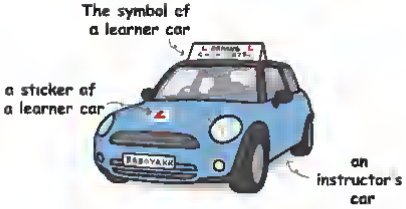
the need to have a car.

But in England public transportation is not as convenient as in Korea, the situation has now changed.

In England, people start driving at a very early age and many of them have their own cars when they are adults.

As houses and shops are in different areas, it's necessary to use a car.



In Korea, people go to a driving academy but in England, people have driving lessons with driving instructors in person and have an exam to get a license.

When Penguin saw the learner cars on the street,...

... she used to think that maybe she should try to get a driving license

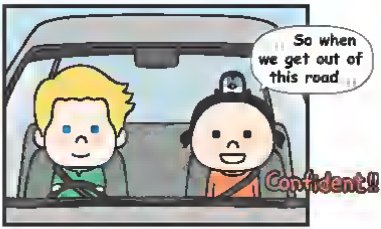
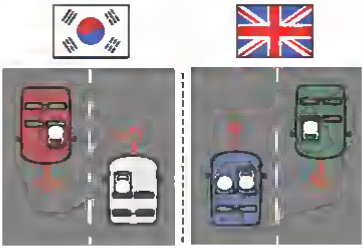
So when Penguin went somewhere with Mev by car, she would learn some basic skills from Mev.



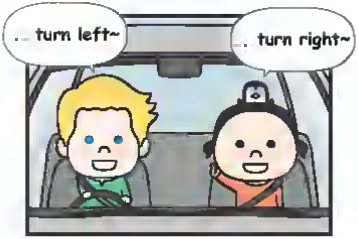
Also she used to imagine driving after passing her test.

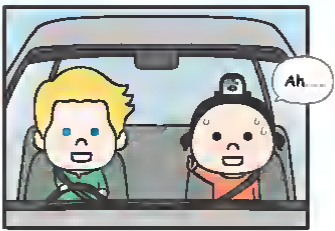
But there was something that she needed to keep in her mind regarding o big difference between Korea and England.



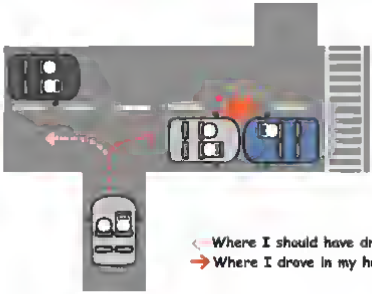
The rule is that the position of the driver's seat and the side of the road that they drive on is opposite.

While she practiced driving in her imagination...





... she always felt that...



. . . she was still a long way off getting a license

I must be able to get it one day.

Sure.
